Which Market?

Master one Market, before you touch another.

Choosing your Market:

Forex

A global market where currencies are bought and sold.
Where people trade one currency for another — like exchanging pounds for dollars — with the aim of making a profit from changes in exchange rates. It operates 24 hours a day, five days a week, because it's connected to financial centres around the world.
Who its best for: Beginners or part-time traders.

Gold (XAU/USD

Where gold is bought and sold as a financial asset, usually traded against the US dollar (XAU/USD). Traders don't physically buy gold, they speculate on its price going up or down to make a profit from its movements.
Who its best for: Those who prefer volatile, fast-moving markets.

Indices

Where traders speculate on the overall performance of a group of top companies in a country or sector (like the S&P 500 or UK100). Instead of trading one company, you trade the "average direction" of the market.
Who its best for: Those like clear trends and strong directional moves.

Chasing the market

Where digital currencies like Bitcoin and Ethereum are bought and sold. traders speculate on whether the price of a cryptocurrency will go up or down to make a profit. Known for being highly volatile, prices can move very quickly in short periods of time, often driven by news, market sentiment, and global demand.
Who its best for: Those who prefer high volatility and fast price swings, 24/7 access.
